

My name is Trisha Price-Smith. I am a nurse educator at Nightingale College of Nursing in SLC, UT, but my heart is in hospice and palliative. I have 20 years of work experience in home health and hospice. I am a graduate of Utah State University and Eagle Gate College of Nursing. I am completing my Doctor of Nursing Practice and advanced nurse practitioner in psychiatric medicine at Maryville University. I

I am passionate about helping people feel that they are the best version of themselves, which becomes increasingly important as we age and move closer to the end of our lives. I believe it is important for family and friends to speak candidly about death and dying and to look at the experience as one that is to be celebrated and honored and not one to be feared. I am honored to present at this group on the more clinical aspect of end-of-life care and to offer some perspective that will ultimately facilitate stronger and more meaningful conversations about death and dying.
